Detailed Action

In response to correspondence filed on 04/28/2008, claims 1, 7-10, 13, 24-26, 44-50, 64-67, 69 and 70 are pending. This office action is made Non-Final.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1, 7-10, 13, 24-26, 44-50, 64-67, 69 and 70 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Rachman et al (US 2002/0182578) in view of Jenkins et al. (US 6,585,519).

Regarding claims 1, 22, 24, 44, 45, 64 and 65, Rachman discloses a system comprising the steps of opening an educational application that includes a plurality of questions pertaining to a subject (e.g. course), answering at least one question (e.g. test) included in the application, providing a link to the user to retrieve additional material(See Abstract and Fig.4B) and receiving a notification from the central site after the answer is provided (See Fig. 4B and 4C) . Rachman does not expressly disclose viewing a model removing an article of clothing when the question is answered correctly. However, Jenkins discloses a motivational method for computer-assisted training system wherein periodic reward animations are presented to the user in such a way that the curiosity of the user to see the rest of the animation further motivates correct response (See Abstract). Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to incorporate the teachings of Jenkins into the system and method of Rachman in order to design a system and method that encourages users to further input correct responses. Jenkins does not specifically disclose a model removing an article of clothing as a reward system. However, such feature is known in the industry and there are numerous websites that provide adult contents, some of which charge for episodes as the user progresses through the movie. Therefore, substituting the reward animations disclosed in Jenkins' invention with such feature in order to motivate an adult to progress through a test and respond correctly would have been a matter of design choice.

Regarding claim 7, Rachman discloses opening the educational application on a central site via a network.

Regarding claims 8-10, 46, 49 Rachman/Jenkins does not disclose a link to instruct a model to remove an article of clothing in response to a correct answer to a question. However, as mentioned in claim 1 rejection, to modify the animation reward system of Jenkins and incorporate an adult content into the system and method of Rachman/Jenkins would be considered a design choice.

Regarding claims 25, 26, 47, 50, Rachman discloses accessing the central site (e.g. course support system) via a network, opening the educational application on a storage medium (e.g. database) provided by the user (See Fig. 1), opening the educational application that comprises a plurality of questions (See Fig. 4B) and receiving the notification from the system when the answer provided is correct (See fig. 4B).

Regarding claim 48, 67 and 70, Rachman does not disclose that the storage medium is CD- Rom. However, the use of CD- ROMs as a storage medium is known in the industry.

Claim 66 discloses means to steps provided in claim 1.

Claim 69 discloses means to perform the steps disclosed in claim 44.

Response to Arguments

Applicant's arguments with respect to claim 1, 7-10, 13, 22, 24-26, 44-46, 50, 62, 64-67, 69 and 70 have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.

The applicant further argues that the feature of viewing a model removing an article of clothing in exchange to a correct response is not a reward system nor is it a design choice. However, considering that the act is performed in response to successfully answering a question, the examiner notes that the feature is in fact a reward system. Since there are plenty of prior arts that disclose a reward system in response to correctly responding to a stimuli (such as Jenkins), substituting one reward system for another to cover a specific age group could be considered as design choice.
